What was easy for me was that I knew exactly what I wanted to write about but I just didn't know how to write it out. Every time I thought about how to start it, a new idea would come to my head. Until I finally started my essay with a basic intro, and after that, everything just started coming to my head, and I could write it out without a problem. I had so many ideas but I don't know why I just couldn't word it the way I wanted to, but in the end it all worked out.

The most helpful activity in the packet was the 12B, which, if I remember, is the one where you put all your ideas for your speech. I also had help from my friends because I asked them what they were going to write about or how they were going to start their speech, so I was just getting ideas from everyone so it could help me out a bit more. It helped me see what exactly I wanted and what I didn't want and how I wanted it to sound and the tone of my speech. It helped me see how my ideas could connect without making it long. It overall helped me figure out how it was going to start and how it was going to end.

One of my personal moments in my speech was when I was talking about my friends. I chose to add her because she has always been there for me; she's like a sister to me. She's funny and smart and has a kind heart. It's hard to find a friend like her because most people are just talking behind their "friends" backs and she never did. Plus, I've known her since we were in 2nd grade, and we been friends since then. She's shown me what true friendship is and that you only ever have that one true friend whom you can trust.

My honest thought is that I know I could've done better. I wish I had added more personal stuff or made it more heartwarming because I know it would have sounded better if it were more heartwarming because I only added one personal thing. I know I could have made it sound better and sound more personal and loving, saying more because I personally feel like I didn't get as much insight as I wanted to or thought I would have.

If I could restart my speech, I would want to change the fact that I put too much effort into it when it was simple and I made it sound like a speech that would be a normal end instead of making it a bit more me and adding to what I knew would make it better and personal. I would've taken away the beginning of my speech because, personally, I think I was repeating the same thing, just wording it differently.
